History

- 1811 -

While Napoleon Bonaparte was facing his last battles at war, the initiative to build a glove factory in Randers, Denmark – known for its fine glove-making – was taken by O.C. Kellermann. He was a merchant with international experience, and so he gathered a group of skilled glove cutters and tanners from France and founded Randers Handskefabrik with 20 craftsmen.

- 1890 -

The seamstresses were trained for 4 years before they could master the delicate full piqué technique. This overlapping technique is commanded in millimetres, one stitch at a time, without being able to see the stitching on the other side. Therefore, also called glove blind-stitching. The technique is still used today, only mastered by a few in the world.

- 1906 -

This photo was taken in 1906, only showing the males working at the glove factory. The man in the white coat with hat, running the factory, is surrounded by tanners, glove cutters, helpers and young family members

- 2000 -

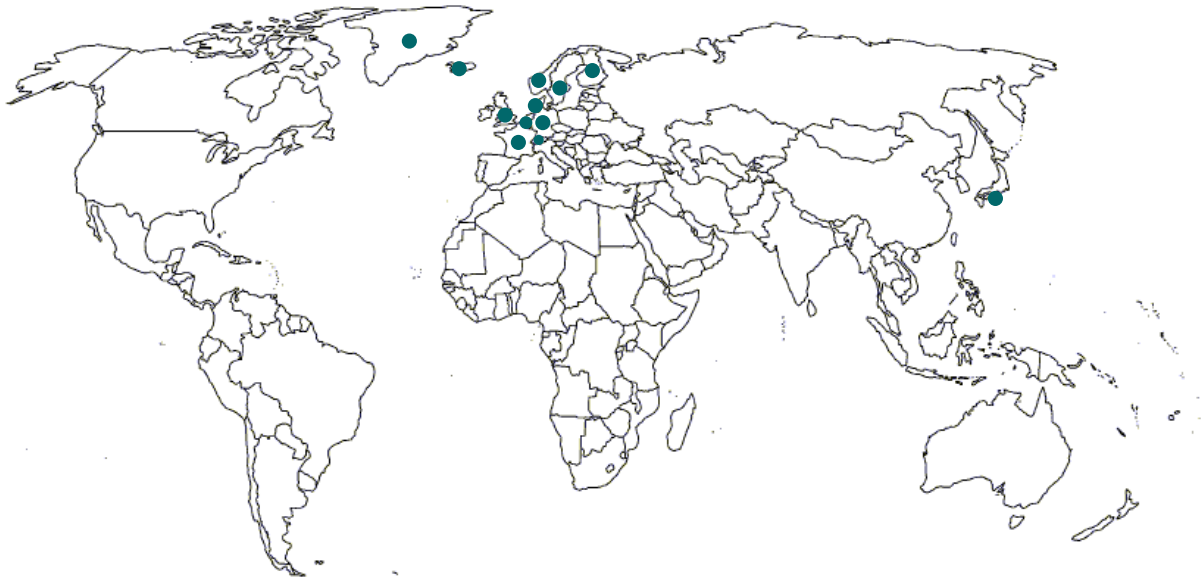

Following hundreds of years of gloving kings, queens and zarinas, Randers Handsker was appointed purveyor to the royal danish court

Erik Vejrum, glove-cutter

Craftsmanship

Glove making involves hundreds of meticulous precision steps by hand.

As glove-leather is only 0.5mm thick, and it is butter-soft and stretchy to perfectly glove your hand, it takes a trained hand to handle the glove-cutting craft. While you can 3D print working gloves or machine knit an entire pair of knitted gloves, no machine can work the leather into the right shape and size for a pair of dress gloves.

It takes years of training. Erik Vejrum, a second generation of Randers Handsker, was particularly trained in glove-cutting, while his brother, Arne Vejrum, was trained in France and London as a glove-tanner.

Heritage

Founded in 1811, Randers Handsker is one of the finest and longest standing glove-makers in the world.

Originally named Randers Garveri & Handskefabrik, then shortened to Randers Handskefabrik and later Randers Handsker, the company has delivered gloves and leather goods to royal families since its inception. Princess Dagmar even continued purchasing Randers gloves after she became Zarina of Russia. The French Queen Marie Antoinette allegedly requested gloves from Randers because of the way they made her hands feel soft and smooth, but also because of the recognisable aroma. This aroma originated from the Kalmus flower, brought to Gudenåen in Randers in the 12th century by monks, and was used in the tanning process.

Today, the company continues the proud purveyorship to Her Royal Highness Queen Margarethe and Crown Princess Mary, as well as, the entire royal family. Equally, Randers Handsker continues to design and craft gloves for the Royal Navy, the SWAT team, the police and the Queen's Guard. Carrying more than 300 designs in the standard assortment, the exquisite products are sold across speciality stores in Scandinavia, Germany, France, The Netherlands, UK and Japan.

A Unique Retail Experience

While many would exchange the old with the new, what RHANDERS values the most is going back to one's roots and taking pride in heritage. In the spring of 2022 the brand has opened its doors to a new retail experience, creating a space where all stories are unveiled. It is possible to get insight into machinery, processes, and how soft treasures are produced; but also to get hands-on and create something of your own.

In the enchanting flagship store of hometown Randers, traces 800 years of history, craftsmanship and fashion design. This historic home is located in Torvegade 12, which the original address of the first store from circa 1895 - 1971.

Stories

Gloving the Royal Court

Rhanders has delivered gloves and leather goods to royal families since its inception. Princess Dagmar even continued purchasing Randers gloves after she became Zarina of Russia. The French Queen Marie Antoinette allegedly requested gloves from Randers because of the way they made her hands feel soft and smooth, but also because of the recognisable Kalmus aroma. Today, RHANDERS continues the proud purveyorship to the Royal Court of Denmark, as well as crafting custom gloves for the European royal households.

World's Best Craftsmanship

Gloves from Rhanders are widely known to be the best gloves in the world. And, all our leather goods are born from this legacy; designed, crafted and developed on more than 200 years of experience. Continuously crafted from the finest and most exquisite lamb leather, offering a butter-soft touch with an astonishing world-class strength. Uniquely table-cut by hand as per centuries of glove-cutting tradition, and sewn according to age-old piqué principles, which can only be mastered by 20 seamstresses in the world. Our products are a lifetime investment.

Randers Handsker TV Documentary

In the start of 2024, we filmed a TV documentary, which will air in the Spring. The documentary is focusing on the story of how we are reviving the 800-year old brand and safeguarding the craftsmanship and heritage - for future generations. The documentary is following owner, Rina Hansen, in the flagship store, museum and in the atelier, as well as, in her own home.

Towards CO2 Positivity

For more than 200 years, we have worked with our hands, nurturing and protecting our quality craftsmanship – with gratitude and respect for what nature gives us from year to year. Today, we are still hands-on. We build, craft and sustain everything we do by hand. But how can we lend a hand to nature? How can we practically move towards being more sustainable and ultimately carbon positive? We refuse to buy carbon offsets and green indulgences. In the beginning of 2021 we purchased and committed to grow our own local forest to secure a flourishing future.

40 years old gloves

Changing the lining after 40 years of use

Preben from the beautiful sea side town in Denmark, Risskov, came into our Randers store to get his gloves repaired after 40 years of use. We offer this special service to our customers, which in turn gives us the pleasure of hearing many lovely stories of gloves and their life.

Preben was gifted his Peccary gloves 40 years ago by his wife when they were newlywed. After 11 years, he lost one of the gloves. So, the tanner, glove cutter and seamstresses at Randers Handskefabrik was charged with the project of crafting a 'mate glove' for the original gloves. As you can imagine, it is quite a project, as the tanner has to match a worn Peccary skin – and not only match it for that day, but foresee how they would marry 3 years from that day. Nevertheless, the match making was completed to perfection and the gloves went on to warm Preben's hands for another 20 years. During that time, the curly lamb lining was changed once and then, about 10 years later, Preben came to get a stitch repaired. This is when we asked him if we could borrow his gloves to capture the story of the gloves in a photo.

Preben kindly agreed, and we paired up his 40-years old gloves with a new pair from the collection. You see, good raw materials, design and craftsmanship can last for more than a hundred years. And, this is just the case with our 'Christian' Peccary gloves.
